Blind Telephonists Complete Course

Eight men and one woman, all blind, have finished a four-month course for telephonist operators in Jerusalem. The graduates are able to operate a switchboard with five outside lines and 20 internal lines at the same speed as other trained operators. They use a Braille machine to take down messages and write telephone numbers. Most of the graduates have received offers of employment. The Post Office has undertaken to set up special switchboards wherever these operators are employed. The course was conducted by the Ministry of Labour.

Farmers Reduce Vegetable Supply

By a Special Correspondent
Current vegetable production is considerably less than last year's, a fact revealed by a survey conducted by the Ministry of Agriculture. This has been caused partly by the per cent cold and rainy weather, but also by the deliberate reduction of the vegetable area by farmers, disappointed with the low prices obtained during the summer months. In the new settlements vegetable areas have been cut by 25% and in the old ones, despite advice from the Ministry to the contrary, by 10%.

Supplies of cauliflowers, cauliflowers, carrots and most other vegetables will continue to be low in the next few months because of the reduced area of cultivation. This is particularly noteworthy in view of the minimum prices guaranteed new settlements by the Ministry of Agriculture. The guarantee was extended and its scope widened just before the present season and it now covers potatoes and 11 of the more important vegetables supplied by 212 settlements.

The list of vegetables covered may be extended during the summer season. In addition, a subsidy has been granted to vegetable growers in 99 of the above settlements in the form of Government participation in the marketing expenses at the rate of 11.33% per ton of vegetables marketed.

When this comprehensive guarantee scheme was inaugurated, it was feared that it might result in an excessive increase in production. The price guarantee was therefore limited to specified quantities for each settlement.

Improved grading and transport facilities for vegetables supplied by new settlements, particularly in the Southern area, have been introduced by Tnuva, in response to farmers' demands. The minimum prices are now set by Tnuva on receipt of the produce, before the actual sale. If the proceeds are in excess of the guaranteed minimum, the difference is credited to the producer. But these improvements were introduced too late to influence the current season.

Leaves Transit Dew to Roots

Investigations of the effect of dew on plant physiology, carried out by Mr. Shmuel Duvdevani, Director of the Desert Research Station at Tel Shalom, near Hadera, have upset many concepts on the methods by which plants absorb water, according to the latest UNESCO publication.

Mr. Duvdevani recently returned from the U.S. after being invited to the California Institute of Technology. His studies on the effect of dew on plants, begun in 1954, have received world-wide attention for years, but it was his lecture at the International Symposium on Desert Research, held in Jerusalem in May, 1952, which led to his being called to California.

According to the UNESCO publication, which describes Mr. Duvdevani's experiments under fully controlled conditions in the University's laboratories, the leaves of plants not only absorb water in the form of dew, but also pass excess quantities of water as collected down to the roots. The roots in turn emit the water into the surrounding soil. With the rising heat of the sun, the plants absorb the water through their roots.

Alpine Avalanche

VIENNA, Monday (Reuter). — Fifty-five volunteer workers in the Grosses Goral were digging all last night by the light of flares though the hope of finding more avalanche victims alive had long since vanished. Officials said there was little danger now of further avalanches. A Vorarlberg spokesman said the damage done in the Grosses Goral was far greater than the mere list of houses and cattle destroyed. The land would take years of hard work to bring it back into good health and the income from cattle and guest houses would be lost.

Trotsky Assassin Seeks Freedom

MEXICO CITY, Monday (UP). — The man known as Jacques Mornard, who murdered Bolshevik leader Leon Trotsky in 1940, had the Mexican Government in a quandary yesterday with his unexpected bid for freedom. Legally, the steady-eyed killer was eligible for immediate parole. But the Government, apparently unwilling to risk releasing Mornard before he completes his 19th year sentence, kept his appeal under wraps while legal experts looked for a way out.

They feared the mysterious 49-year-old Communist, if freed, might put Mexico in international dispute again. One official said it was "possible Mornard might never walk out through the prison gates until he revealed the secrets shrouding one of the most cunning political murderers ever wanted and executed."

Mornard's tight-lipped silence, 13 years after he crushed Trotsky's skull with a pickaxe, makes him seem a country and not an enemy. He is a Russian and Russian agents want him most.

Immigration officials said they might attack his appeal either on the basis of prison psychiatrists' reports that he is still considered a "dangerous criminal," or on grounds that he is a man without a country and not entitled to legal residence — and freedom — in Mexico.

Warden Gen. Florencio Anis Loyola said, however, that Mornard has been a "model prisoner" and he would support his plea for parole.

Mornard, a man of mystery whose real identity has never been established, began his quiet fight for freedom two weeks ago, surprising many authorities who had believed he would remain in the safety of prison walls.

Mexican newspapers predicted Mornard would not live long if he ever left his comfortable prison cell, where he receives regular visits from his girl friend and has time for building model airplanes and other hobbies.

Bolesheviks, led by Trotsky's widow, a "grandson" want to get their hands on him to prove Trotsky's dying charge that Josef Stalin ordered his assassination. Russian secret agents reportedly want to seal his lips forever, despite the fact that Mornard kept his secret under torture by Trotsky's followers.

Press Review : Call for J'lem Election Is Admission of Bankruptcy

The unanimous decision of the Jerusalem municipal council for new elections is an open admission of bankruptcy by the present city coalition, "Davar" (Histadrut) asserts in its leading article. The paper regrets that the Government did not intervene at an earlier date. But now that an all-time low has been reached in view of the right-wing coalition's utter inefficiency, new elections at an early date are the only way out of the impasse. "Herut" reminds its readers that though this party belongs to the Jerusalem coalition its representatives favoured new elections even a year ago. The paper charges the "anti-democratic" Mapai opposition with the responsibility for the Jerusalem crisis.

Three Reasons — "Zmanim" (Progressive) believes that there are three reasons for Mr. Sharet's failure to conclude his coalition negotiations. One, the talks were not held in the form of a round table conference but only between the two big parties. Two, the negotiations between Mapai and Mafpek which took place though no one believed that an agreement was possible. Three, the manoeuvres of the General Zionists, who tried to exploit Ben Gurion's resignation to the Government. What is needed now, the paper says, is a Government at the earliest and if broad coalition be impossible, then let there be a small one. "Haboker" (General Zionist) complains at Mapai's delay in ratifying the coalition pact. It is not true that the General Zionists should be made responsible for the present delays; Mapai, not the G.Z., have to decide.

Al Hashishmar (Mapai) criticizes the "patriotism of the heroes of free enterprise," commenting on their stand on the sale of the Potash company. The paper says that nationalization is something quite different (e.g. the transfer of the company to the state without compensation). This revelation which has been made now, that it would have been possible under certain conditions to sell

Haifa Grain Silo Mounts 17 Metres

HAIFA, Monday. — The 20,000 ton grain transit silo now under construction in Haifa Port has reached 17 metres of its total height of 43 metres, and the adjoining tower, in which equipment with 200 tons per hour capacity will be installed, is now 24 metres high and will rise to 59 metres. Dr. Reuben Hecht, founder and Chairman of the Haifa Grain Silo Company in Haifa, states in his annual report.

As the site was made available over a year later than scheduled, the Government contract, building costs have risen markedly, and the capital which the Dagun Company had to pay in full in 1950 according to its contract, no longer sufficed to cover the increased construction costs. After protracted negotiations, the Government has granted the company an interim credit of IL500,000, to be paid in cash or, alternatively, in Ordinary shares to a nominal amount of IL400,000, without voting rights.

So far $950,000 and IL400,000 have been invested in Dagun, the nominal share capital of which is still IL450,000. The $950,000 was provided by 180 private investors in the U.S., Switzerland, Mexico, and Canada, mostly at the rate of $2.50 to IL1. The company, an approved enterprise, now has to revalue the shares bought in foreign currency and to increase its nominal capital, measures which the Government is bound to support.

The report stresses the friendly attitude of Government Departments and the Port of Haifa Authority.

The foundations of the silo are calculated to bear a weight of 50,000 tons. They consist of 68 giant pillars sunk 10 metres deep into the ground, about eight metres below sea level. The pillars are being constructed by Housing and Building Corporation, employs about 140 workers on the site. A 180 metre-long conveyor bridge to the water-front is being constructed by Solt Boneh. The complicated technical problems are being solved in cooperation with the Neptune Company of Basel, largest silo operators in Switzerland.

Installation of the machinery is to begin in June, and the company is considering putting the silo into service as soon as it has reached the stage when it can store 12,000 tons of grain.

The Ministry of Communications is providing approach roads and railway sidings, and is rebuilding a fleet of 40-ton railway wagons for the transporting of loose grain in bulk in coastal trains. The direct and indirect savings resulting from the country's entire grain imports being handled by the Haifa silo and rail transport in bulk, will run into millions of pounds annually, most of it in foreign currency.

Central Command Win Army Boxing Cup

In a very close contest for this year's Army boxing championships, Central Command beat Training Command by 24 points to 23.

Boxing in an Army camp before an enthusiastic crowd of officers and men, the close and dramatic heavyweight fight was won on points by J. Siegel, of the Central Command, against S. Wolfkowitz.

Southern Command were third with 13 points followed by Northern Command, seven points, Nahal four and the Air Force three.

An Italian will referee the Greece-Israel soccer match in Tel Aviv in March in the first of a series of world soccer championships. The Israel Amateur Soccer Federation has suggested that Turkey provide the linesmen.

Meanwhile, it is learned that Israel's proposal to nominate an Israeli and a Yugoslav to act as linesmen during the return world cup match against Yugoslavia, to be held here on March 21, was rejected by the Yugoslavians after the choice has been agreed upon. The choice lies now between Italian, Turkish and Cypriot linesmen.

Knesset's Constructive Legislation

Cabinet and House Contrast and Complement

By BARUCH AZARYAH, M.K.

SUMMING UP the work of the Knesset in 1962/63, a weekly paper concluded that parliament has become a mere institution for securing consent, making no independent decisions, and approving by rote the proposals of unselected officials. In fact, however, the legislative activity of the Knesset is ramified, and its independence will doubtless emerge from a brief examination of four of the measures with which it has had to deal recently.

Like other democratic states, ours is based on the separation of powers. Legislative and executive borders are separated, except that the Government of course depends on the Knesset's confidence. The judiciary is entirely free from interference by either of the other two branches and in the extent to which this freedom is provided lies the constitutional importance of the Judiciary Law.

Comparing the formulation of the draft bill proposed by the Government and the law adopted by the Knesset, we are provided with two examples by which our parliament asserted its independence. The Government had proposed that the Judges' Nomination Committee be mainly composed of representatives of the Knesset and the Cabinet. The Knesset, however, decided that a majority of the committee (five members out of nine) be members of the Bar and of the higher judiciary. The Government had suggested that the Attorney-General be a member of the Committee; the Knesset excluded him, on the ground that he might bring pressure to bear on the judges.

Marriage and Divorce Law

Two serious amendments to the Government's draft bill on marriage and divorce were made by the Knesset. The first denied the sole right of the Rabbinical Court to review the validity of divorces and of marriages contracted abroad. The second affords protection to the wife against the husband's carrying out the ruling of the court for the wife's benefit, but the Knesset initiated and passed an article to this effect in the Marriage and Divorce Law. The Attorney-General may now request a District Court to compel husband or wife to carry out the ruling of the court in favour of the wife, under threat of imprisonment.

While expressing an opinion on the changes, I believe they prove the Knesset's legislative independence, for they have far-reaching social and political implications.

While I did not directly participate in the discussion of the Income Tax Law Amendment, which was considered in the Finance Committee, I should like to quote one typical illustration of the Knesset's independence in this field as well. The basic earnings exempted from tax were set at IL 620. The Government meant this exemption to be uniform for all, while the Knesset would allow it only in the case of lower incomes. A compromise resulting in graduated exemptions was evolved after a lengthy and passionate discussion.

The State Education Act permitted parents of children in any school a one-time opportunity to opt out of the national network and seek recognition of their own school provided it fulfilled certain conditions. Such an additional school had to muster the support of two thirds of the parents of the school in question and in any case the number had not to be less than 100.

The Government had insisted 60 per cent of parents would be sufficient, but the Knesset decided to raise this figure to two-thirds.

Initiative in Legislation

No draft law generally passes the Knesset Committee without the most meticulous examination. Here the Government's extra-ordinarily high standards of opinion, and Opposition members afford constructive assistance.

Nature's after each such common effort the Opposition gives itself some leeway to maintain its avowed disapproval of the Government, largely for public consumption. One should not be over-stressed. One should, instead, pay attention to more important questions. The Opposition parties send their best spokesmen to the Knesset. Do they, active there? How much do they contribute to the Government's work?

The Knesset represents an independent legislative will. The majority behind the Government carries out its programme in principle, but in practice, as an assistant partner, and critic. And the essence of its work can be appreciated only if close attention is paid to the work of both the plenum and the committees.

Djilas Manifests Will For Freedom in Yugoslavia

By RICHARD LOWENTHAL

This is the first of two articles on Yugoslavia's internal crisis.

BONN (OFFNS).—

HAS the loosening of Yugoslavia's Communist dictatorship by gradual reforms reached its limit? Has Marshal Tito's country arrived at the point where the Party regime must be abolished and the Party machine dissolved in order to ensure the free development of the new Socialist economy and its organs of self-government? These are the questions underlying the current controversy raised by the sensational articles of Milovan Djilas, President of the newly elected National Assembly, and one of the closest to Tito—a controversy which for the first time has pitted against one another, in some cases, the leaders who broke with Moscow in 1948. The General Committee of the Yugoslav Communist Party this week opened an inquiry into Djilas' "heresy," and he was relieved of office, although for the present he remains a member of the Yugoslav Communist Party.
